Jens, Thanks. I want to add the following to the OP's original post: This trojan is very dangerous because it disables Windows' inbuilt Antivirus software, so while your computers might be protected from viruses that it has created, it's still capable of getting into your system and potentially causing more damage. At this point, you should have a proper antivirus protection program installed on your computer, with immediate access to any scan or repair. I want to add my mother's experience with this trojan. Her year 2003 Dell dimension 8300 laptop got infected by this trojan, she tried many antivirus programs that all say she's safe, however, it kept backfiring and taking over her booting process. After much troubleshooting, she was able to remove it with the instructions from anti-virus softwares, but now she keeps getting this error "a critical error has occurred during the restore boot sector. the system could not start correctly 1.and then enter the windows repair utility, I tried all the guides that I can find and nothing works. I've seen many threads about this trojan around the web. What should I do to get rid of this trojan? First, i want to say thanks to the people who posted reply to my thread. Good job people!! I'm posting this thread with the hope that I'll be able to receive some valuable advise from people who have been successful removing this trojan. My mother's laptop has this trojan in it and all of the instructions that i can find that worked for others don't seem to work for her. I've tried ALL the free antivirus that is available in the "Advanced System Care" in the "Tools" section. It always gives me a green light, and it says that it's "Good", however, I still get the error "the restore boot sector error" each time I boot up my laptop. I also have a "Quick Heal - Malwarebytes Antivirus Pro" and "Kaspersky" both saying that the trojan is removed. I've read about removing 6a5afdab4c
