What's New in the Tweeti Messenger?

Tweeti is an LAN messaging client that allows users to send and receive messages and attachments over TCP/IP or UNIX sockets. For an intuitive interface, a collection of emoticons and a useful video conferencing feature, this is one of the best clients for LAN messaging. In addition to a full chat box, the client offers various features that make communication simple and fun. One can block files and folders, set the time and date, and even configure an image for profile customization. One can also generate a graphical status bar that indicates when the other party is busy and when it is idle. The program can be used for instant messaging, file sharing and data transfer, or video conferencing. Features: Block and view the files a partner sends. Easy to use chat interface Instant messaging Video conferencing File transfer Capacity to send one-time message Edit the profile and add a custom image Receive one-time messages in the chat Send one-time message Customize the title of the chat Block sender's files Disable the sending of .exe files Block the sending of files with sizes greater than 100KB Configure and modify the volume Change the status of the conversation Change the time and date Tight security to prevent sensitive files from being sent Create a new chat Create a group chat Chat with one person Tight security to prevent sensitive files from being sent Create a new chat Create a group chat Customize the title of the chat Edit the profile and add a custom image To receive and send messages, the application is divided into four main sections: the chat, the status bar, the settings, and the media. For the chat, there is an in-box chat, a favorite chat, a chat window, and a text box. How it works The LAN messaging client is connected to a local network and a list of other chat users is maintained. Each user is represented by a nickname and the identity of the partner can be viewed at any time. Users can send each other photos and files, send one-time messages, or set up a chat for video conferencing. Each chat window is a round window that contains all of the chat logs. The image below shows an example of a conversation. How to use it As mentioned above, in order to send and receive files, the LAN messaging client is divided into four sections: the chat, the status bar, the settings, and the media. For the chat, there is an in-box chat, a favorite chat, a chat window, and a text box. Image: How to install Tweeti Messenger?
